

Wivine Ngongo, MPH

she/her

Community-Powered Approaches to Impacting Maternal Health

Wivine Ngongo, MPH, earned her Master of Public Health degree from the Colorado School of Public Health in 2017, concentrating in Community and Behavioral Health and in Global Health.

She currently serves as the Population Health Program Manager for Colorado Access within the Health Programs Department. However, she works with teams and leaders across company departments to ultimately help tell the stories of their efforts as they relate to health programs processes and outcomes, and their Health First Colorado (Medicaid) and CHP+ members.

Wivine has a strong background in medical and public health research, planning, implementing, and evaluating health programs, community engagement, and diversity, equity, and inclusion initiatives.

Her passions and experiences have also centered around addressing health disparities for Black/Indigenous/People of Color (BIPOC) populations. These include her work with the Colorado Sickle Cell Treatment and Research Center, as well as Denver's Center for African American Health.

She has authored and co-authored publications centering health equity in medical education from her time with Northwestern's Feinberg School of Medicine and has current interest in pursuing a PhD tract in psychology.

Her proudest achievement is leveraging her gained knowledge and privileges around sickle cell healthcare to help get her adult sister cured from the invasive disease in 2020.

Contact me:

wivine.ngongo@coaccess.com

www.coaccess.com

