

Lindsey Gagnon, PsyD

she/her

Special Needs Parenting: A Perspective on having a Child with Complex Medical and Developmental Needs

Dr. Lindsey Gagnon is mother to her four-year-old daughter, James-Rose or as she is better known: “Rosie,” Rosie Roo, the Rose Bud, and Roodle Scootle.

Rosie was born full term after an unremarkable pregnancy, but surprised her parents at birth with symptoms of neonatal encephalopathy.

She was later diagnosed with Ohtahara Syndrome, a rare and debilitating neurological disorder with intractable seizures.

Lindsey is also a clinical psychologist here in Denver, Colorado.

She is working in private practice at Denver DBT and Psychotherapy where she provides individual adult psychotherapy and is the leader of the early adolescent Dialectical and Behavior Therapy group.

Contact me: gagnon.lindsey@gmail.com